The Truth About the “Battle of Geljǰürgen” in 1625: An Examination of the Background of the Fortification and the Meaning of the City’s Name

Yuzhi (Department of Mongolian History, Inner Mongolia University; shenhasi@163.com)

Abstract: In 1623, Ooba, the tribal leader of Nun-Khorchin Mongols, was proclaimed Khan under the instigation of Nurhaci. The following year, he formed an anti-Ligden Khan the Mongolian great Khan alliance with the Aisin Gürün, and under Nurhaci’s suggestion, he built the city of Geljǰürgen (“Fearless City” in Manchu) on the left bank of the Nenjiang River in preparation against any threat from Ligden Khan. At this time, Ligden Khan’s uncle Zalbu Taiji and others defected to Ooba, which intensified the contradictions between both sides. In the winter of 1625, Ligden Khan sent troops to besiege Ooba in the city of Geljǰürgen, demanding Zalbu Taiji and others. Ooba asked his ally the Aisin Gürün for help. Nurhaci led troops to Kaiyuan City. However, Nurhaci withdrew the troops since he was afraid of Ligden Khan. This left Ooba without any options. Resigned to his fate, Ooba was forced to capture Zalbu Taiji and others and turn them over to Ligden Khan. After that Ligden Khan withdrew his troops. There are no reliable official sources from the Qing period that indicate that Ligden Khan retreated from the siege because he was afraid of the Aisin Gürün.
